turned to the rooms in the Corcoran building by the Sherman campaign committee, certain that the money would be safe in the Treasury, but after the "Meine" investigation came back into the Treasury $10; that Z. D. Taylor, a member of the committee, took the Treasury on a voucher ceiling, upon its face, for "the purchase of the Meines," to the amount of $30; that Paul Brown, a member of the committee, and John Nierue, Treasury employee, did work on Sherman's behalf; that the money was paid out of the Treasury in the form of checks, and that the Treasury did not keep any record of the money; that the money was used to pay for the purchase of carpets and was sold at private sale to subscribers; that the money was used to pay for the salaries of the employees of the Treasury, and that great irregularities existed in those sales and the payment of the money; that the money was used to pay for the purchase of the sales of waste paper.

The report gives a number of instances of the purchase of the money for sundry articles, and the purchase of the money for sundry articles proceeds as follows: "George N. Lamphere, appointed by the committee as a clerk, and prepared and had published a book, 'The Sherman

THE TESTIMONY OF SENATOR SHERMAN.

The report then quotes extensively the testimony of Senator Sherman. He was furnished with copies of the testimony as it was taken, and was astonished to find that money had been expended on various things, and that the money was for any other improper purpose, or that anything had been purchased for the Treasury and not paid for by the Treasury. He was surprised to find that the labor of government employees upon his premises, said: "I want to say emphatically and without reservation that I have never received any money while I was Secretary of the Treasury, who was on the rolls of the Treasury department, during office hours, or at any time, or in any way, for doing it, or I believe he was paid for it, by Mr. Pliny, or out of my own pocket."

He said that his testimony was not positively having any knowledge or information

The committee ruled that the insertion into proper appropriation bills provisions making it a penal offense for any employee to certify to any voucher calling upon its face for any article or thing purchased or intended to be purchased by himself and intended to be used by him, and also making it a penal offense for any person to certify to any voucher made to the government to be paid for or signed any voucher made to the government upon its face for any other article other than that actually purchased or intended to be purchased by him, was not in violation of laws that do not seem to cover such cases clearly.
